A STAFF E-NEWSLETTER APRIL 13, 2016

THE GIFT OF GIVING

BY KATHRYN DILWORTH

As we approach the annual Awards Luncheon, I reached out to colleagues in the Libraries who support the awards for student workers. I wanted to know what motivated them to give back to the Libraries when they already give so much to students through the services they provide. The discussions I had were animated and sometimes emotionally moving. The compassion that was so obvious is something that is shared throughout the libraries in the many ways that everyone plays a role delivering the mission and vision of service, programming, research and user experience.

I asked each colleague why, when they already devoted so much time and talent to students did they also feel compelled to make gifts in their honor.

Angie, Ewing, Student and Circulation Supervisor in the Math Library said that her former boss, Richard Funkhouser, inspired her to start making gifts to the Libraries. "He loves the Libraries and has given so much back." One of the founders of the PULSE Awards, she explains, "Our students deserve our help — they really need it, too. I'm not able to give a lot, but in the end I think I can really make a difference in their lives."

Mary Sego, Archives Processing Assistant, also a member of the small group who started the PULSE Awards said when asked about her reason for continuing to support this program through payroll deduction, "When a person is grateful, you want to do even more for them." She said that her greatest reward for supporting the student employees is that she gets to see them build a passion for the Libraries. She recognizes that these awards are often transformational gifts for these students.

Lisa Purvis, Director of Instruction & Digital Programs, is also about the power to transform the students who work alongside the faculty and staff in the Libraries. She gives to support awards and programs for students because she has been in their shoes. A former student worker, herself, her experience inspired her future career. She says, "I want to give back to the students by supporting their awards. Just like the work I do for them, this is about building a passion for learning."

Shannon Walker, Director of Strategic Communications, participates in payroll deduction as well as the annual fund and the Purdue Day of Giving to support the Libraries. "I feel compelled to give back because I see the incredible impact the Libraries has had (and continues to have) on learning, curriculum, research, scholarship, open access and more. I know my donation is helping to fund meaningful work across a variety of disciplines."

Of all the experiences I've had in the library environment throughout my career, passion for the mission and commitment to the user experience is universal. It is humbling to see that passion take on a tangible form through the giving that occurs from within here at Purdue. I have the honor of celebrating the work that you all do when I speak to donors and put forth funding proposals. Being able to tell the story of the Purdue Libraries makes my job so meaningful. Thank you all for the funds that you return to the Libraries through annual giving and payroll deduction. This support ensures that we continue to do the good work we all believe in so much.

PUBLICATIONS AND PRESENTATIONS

Kuh said that through all of our endeavors, we must teach students to:

- Reflect on their experiences in and out of the classroom,
- Apply what they have learned to new challenges and opportunities, and
- Integrate what they are learning from different courses and out-of-class experiences.

Hosted by Purdue's IMPACT program (Instruction Matters: Purdue Academic Course Transformation), a University-wide initiative in which instructors redesign foundational courses to make them more student-centered, the Symposium aimed to promote discussion of innovative teaching and learning at Purdue. The Symposium planning committee was comprised of Libraries faculty Clarence Maybee (Chair) and Michael Flierl, and ITaP staff Suzanne Ahlersmeyer and Sheree Buikema.

Of the 100 attendees at the Symposium presentation, 70 stayed to engage in faculty-led table discussions about three themes that Dr. Kuh spoke about: 1) forging tomorrow's workforce, 2) empowering diverse learners, and 3) fostering student success. The ten table leaders were faculty who had previously participated in IMPACT.

In the afternoon of April 6, Dr. Kuh facilitated an Assignment Charrette workshop with a group of instructors from IMPACT and the Teaching Academy. An architectural term, a charrette is an intense creative effort in a limited time period. The fifteen instructors who attended this workshop shared and discussed ways to make one of their assignments more effective. In the evening, the Honors College hosted a reception for Dr. Kuh attended by Honors College faculty and members of the IMPACT Advisory Board.

A video of the Symposium presentation and PowerPoint slides from the Symposium and Charrette workshop will soon be available on the IMPACT website: www.purdue.edu/impact/

LIBRARIES NEW STAFF

Audrey Grisham
Library Assistant
Humanities, Social Science, and Education Library

Hello! I have really enjoyed my first few weeks at HSSE! I have received a very warm welcome from all the staff here and I am excited to be a part of this staff. Currently, I am working as a library assistant, and will eventually become the Student Supervisor for the HSSE Library.

I am from the Lafayette area originally, graduating from Purdue in 2008. I spent the last six years working at a middle school library in the area. Although I miss working with the younger kids, I am excited to be back at Purdue! It has changed so much!

Some activities I enjoy in my free time are reading Science Fiction novels, baking, playing video and board games and watching movies.

You can find me at my desk in HSSE, located behind the iDesk on the first floor, send me an email at agrisham@purdue.edu, or you can reach me by phone at 49-67923.
